

FAREWELL TO BATTERY DAN.

THE STATESMAN OF THE FIRST WISH HIM GODSPEED.

He's Going to Hot Springs and the Election Captains Celebrate—Eating Interference With the Speechmaking—Justice Finn Is Not Worried About His District.

Everybody was on the job to eat at the dinner which the election captains and prominent statesmen of the First Assembly district gave to their leader, Magistrate Battery Dan Finn, at Cavanaugh's restaurant on West Twenty-third street last night, and as the half shells of Bizzard Bay weren't served until 9:30 o'clock there was no time for speeches when the First district reached the café en demi-tasse, except little talks of a very informal nature. Battery Dan has just finished a siege of indignation, he said last night, but the real reason for the dinner was that the district wanted to show him what they thought of him before he leaves for Hot Springs, Ark., next Wednesday.

Assistant Corporation Counsel W. T. Kennedy presided at the dinner, and presided at the spread and presided at the feast, and adjuring on him at the tables was the flower of the First: Senator Dominick F. Mullany, Assemblyman James F. Cavanaugh, Thomas Hassett, secretary of the Water Board, who avoided Croton with the rest of the brethren; James Riordan, bond clerk in Mayor McClellan's office and chairman of the Tammany general committee; W. J. A. Coffey, Terry Duffy, the veteran captain of the First; Dr. Edmund H. Quinn, ex-Assemblyman Tom Caughlan, the well known fruitist; Capt. (election captain) Tony Ferrara, Joe Pasco, the best known boot and shoemaker on Thompson street; Joshua Margolina, who has the leading place of business on the Mulberry street block in which he lives; Mike Salter, who entertained Prince Henry of Battenberg at his fashionable resort, the Pelham; the Hon. Johnny Kenny of Chinatown and vicinity; Charles Jordano, the most renowned real estate dealer of Oliver street and who has risen rapidly in Tammany because of his political connections; entered at the Hall with the O at the beginning of it instead of at the finale; Tony Pasano of Thompson street, who said that it was all the same to him whether he would state what business he was in; Alexander Gillier, the restaurateur; Al Russell, the genial boniface of the Hotel Cob Dock; formerly Cob Dock Hotel; in the Bowery; and Vincent Spina, the Thompson street saloonier.

This makes twenty statesmen, but there were others—about one hundred and fifty in all when one added the guests to the twenty-four election captains at the tables. There was an elaborate engraved menu besides, with the Stars and Stripes on the cover, flanked with a picture of Justice going it blind, as usual. The Manhattan cocktails, claret Bordeaux and the Maraschino sherbet were served on the table, printed in pink ink. Pietro Maraschino said that the sherbet had been named after him, but at a late hour this could not be verified.

All during the dinner Dan Sullivan, who shone in a white waistcoat that caused many favorable comments, directed the "raucous" which he had reported to the Monologues John Fogarty and John McDonald, the first of whom is Brooklyn's favorite comedian and the last John, the official jester of the First district. A third John, last name, Webster, who will be recalled by all patrons of dramatic art as "the Little Man With the Big Voice," sang a bunch of songs to the company, and an orchestra of three pieces, a piano, a piano stool and Prof. Engle, Joseph Bennett of Tony Pasano's also bit off some close harmony.

The restaurant orchestra played "Tammany" early in the evening and repeated every third number. The music was received with "Yells" like those that greet "Dixie" in the hot biscuit belt. After the fourth rendition of "Tammany" the musicians started on a new piece, when a committee consisting of St. Hawkins, the Washington Market farmer; lawyer Jacob Clark and ex-Assemblyman William Duffy requested the orchestra to let well enough alone. About this time Tony Belladonna was saying with tears of griefness dropping gently into his Chicken Soup on Tompkins street, "I wish I was a man like this was the finest Battery Dan dinner he had ever attended."

Battery Dan, wearing one of the most resplendent private dresses in the district, stood up to make a little speech in which he told of his appreciation of the testimonial dinner and of his pleasant surprise when the news of the dinner was brought to him by a day or two ago. He said he would not forget his indignation and give the entire memory of his brain over to remembering the dinner. On Wednesday he will sail for Hot Springs by way of New Orleans, he said, so certain that the district will be run in its customary exemplary manner during his absence. He was then no use even to leave instructions.

James Riordan and Assistant Corporation Counsel Kennedy told briefly but eloquently how the district was being represented by the Barge Office up to Tom Foley's, whereupon the orchestra played "Tammany" by way of diversion. Tony Belladonna then tried it again, with the remark that whatever his doubts might have been before he came he was now absolutely certain that this Battery Dan dinner would never be even approached in the future, and then the party reluctantly broke up.

"DOWN WITH THE WASTRELS!"

Big Turnout Against M. O. Extravagance in London.

Special Cable Dispatch to THE SUN.
LONDON, Feb. 23.—The greatest popular demonstration seen in London in many years occurred this afternoon, when uncounted thousands marched through the principal streets to Trafalgar Square, where a mass meeting was held in opposition to the socialistic policy of the London County Council. The municipal reformers were themselves astonished at the evidence given of the popular revolt against the extravagance and incompetence shown in municipal ownership experiments which have so damaged London's credit.

The procession was more than a mile long and included many unique features. Fifty men carried hods of rotten bricks from the Council's famous brick making yards at Norbury. Others carried some of the Council's surplus Austrian blankets from a lot of 2,000 unloaded upon the municipality because a requisition for 200 had a cipher added to it.

There were fifty powerful gramophones in line which ground out fervid comments upon "wastrels" for the delectation of the great crowds along the route. Cartoons and election mottoes without number were carried upon drays and floats. A huge representation of a County Council steamboat was inscribed: "One man, one boat."

"Down with the wastrels!" was the cry most frequently heard among the cheering multitudes. The motto was greatest in Trafalgar Square, which was literally packed, many thousands being unable to get within earshot of Nelson's Monument, which was used as a rostrum.

There were speeches by half a dozen members of the House of Commons and leaders of the Municipal Reform party and the meeting adopted a resolution setting forth that "this mass meeting of London ratepayers indignantly protests against the increasing burden of rates caused by the Progressive Socialist party and pledges itself to exert every effort to turn the wastrels out on March 2 and in power the party of municipal reform."

London is now plastered from end to end with election posters, and cartoons, and it is no exaggeration to say that public interest in the pending campaign surpasses that in the reform movement, for if a heavy vote is cast nothing can prevent the overwhelming defeat of the party which has controlled municipal affairs for the last eighteen years.

Municipal ownership, it should be remembered, is the sole issue involved, and it is upon the first great and thorough test of this policy that London will pass judgment a week hence.

SKYSCRAPERS FOR PARIS.

Kick Against Debasement of Place de l'Etoile—Women Cab Drivers.

Special Cable Dispatch to THE SUN.

PARIS, Feb. 23.—Will those who look on Paris as the perfect city of their early love, where art holds sway and the base exactions of economics are frowned down, listen to the tale of skyscrapers in a city of light and close their ears to such an enormous abasement and cry "impossible?" At any rate the skyscraper threatens and already automobile shops have been opened in the Rue de la Paix among the houses of grand furniture of all women love.

The new demands of modern, progressive life are such that the magnificent Place de l'Etoile is threatened with disfigurement, by buildings which will overtop the existing ones which conserve the harmony of this notable prospect and there are loud complaints against such profanation.

The plan is to construct high buildings behind those facing the Place, so that they will appear to be part of the general scheme. But they will destroy the original project based on the line of beautiful perspective and wholly spoil the ensemble. These exalted monuments of modernity are not yet up, however, and demands are made that the Place de l'Etoile be so marred.

A description of old buildings, even historic ones, receives little attention nowadays save from a casual wanderer, but one prosaic sign announcing a sale of second hand materials produced some emotion a few days ago when it was found that it was on the building where Charlotte Corday first lived in Paris. Among the articles offered at this sale was a dormer window for which Charlotte Corday had been reflected before she went to the Palais Royal to buy the knife to stab Marat.

At a time when the American press is discussing attempts at Washington and elsewhere to limit its freedom, it may be interesting to some people to hear that an anonymous lover of freedom has just given a large sum to the Journalists' Association of Budapest for the benefit of writers who are punished for publishing facts of public interest.

The women cab drivers express satisfaction at the results of their first day's work, but maintain professional silence in regard to the exact figures of their earnings. They had a severe test in one respect, as the weather was bitterly cold with much snow and rain. Their welcome in various quarters has been varied. One had her reins out, while another received a glass of champagne and a sidewalk during a prolonged wait.

One of the latest four to qualify is a veritable Countess, whose husband is a church soloist. The singer lost his appointment as a result of the changes introduced, since the Church and state separated. The Countess acquired a knowledge of driving during her days of wealth. She speaks English, German and Spanish. She wears a white glazed hat because her horse wears a white collar.

A grand prize of $1,000 will be awarded in 1908 for the best work, French or foreign produced between 1903 and 1907, dealing with the history, ethnography, archaeology and languages of races indigenous to America previous to the arrival of Columbus. Authors who desire to compete must send ten copies of their works to the secretary of the National Library before January 1, 1908. A jury of eight will decide the winner, who must obtain ten votes.

PETTIBONE PLANNED MURDER.

ADAMS TOLD OF PLOT TO BLOW UP GOV. STEUBENBERG.

Idaho Court Admits Confession of the Murderous Schemes of Western Miners' Federation Officials—Corroboration Harry Orchard's Story of the Assassination.

WALLACE, Idaho, Feb. 23.—The confession of Steve Adams, as made to Detective James McFarland, was read to-day to the jury which is trying Adams for the murder of Fred Tyler.

It covered not only the details of the assassination of Tyler but corroborated fully the confession of Harry Orchard regarding the murder of former Gov. Steunenberg and many four crimes of the Inner Circle of the Western Federation of Miners in Colorado and elsewhere.

It implicated President Moyer, Secretary Haywood and Executive Committee member Pettibone of the Western Federation in the Steunenberg plot and in other conspiracies to murder and to destroy property.

The confession says that Adams joined the Western Federation at Cripple Creek, Col., and became intimate with Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone. Pettibone, Adams said, gave him instructions to go to Idaho and confer with Jack Simpkins, another tool of the Inner Circle, on plans to "get" Gov. Steunenberg. Adams got $200 at that time from Pettibone for his expenses. He told Adams to make his own plans for "getting" Steunenberg. Adams then said in the confession that he went to Idaho once and with Simpkins planned and carried out the murder of the Governor. He said he had a conversation with Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone before Pettibone gave him his instructions, during which Moyer and Haywood told him they wanted him to go to Idaho and see Simpkins about Steunenberg. Pettibone gave him his orders and the money later, Moyer being in jail at Telluride at that time. Adams said Pettibone told him Haywood furnished the money for Adams's expenses in Idaho.

The confession corroborates that of Orchard regarding the use of Pettibone's compound called "hell fire," which was to be used to destroy a trainload of non-union men on the Oregon Short Line road in Idaho, and says this plot failed and the "hell fire" was buried at a town in Idaho.

This compound was dug up later by accident by men who were excavating for a building. They narrowly escaped being cremated. This incident further verifies this part of the Adams and Orchard confessions.

The confession further corroborated that of Orchard regarding the placing of an infernal machine in the path of a justice of the Colorado Supreme Court, in Denver, but which was exploded by a member of the federation by accident. The explosion killed him.

The placing of a bomb under the gate of another Colorado Supreme Court Justice was detailed in the confession. This bomb was found by Adjutant-General Wells and others at the spot designated, as will be testified to by Wells, who is here as a witness.

The confession said regarding the Tyler murder that when Adams reached Idaho and met Simpkins the latter, after discussing the Steunenberg case, said that he wanted to get rid of some claim jumpers and would pay Adams $300 to kill them. Adams said in the confession that he and Simpkins went out on the trail near the Tyler claim and that he (Adams) killed Tyler with a rifle, Simpkins being in the car at the time. The body of Tyler was placed between two logs, he said, and it was so found later by ranchmen and officers.

Another man, Mont Glover, was associated with Adams and Simpkins at this time and the three killed another man, who Simpkins said was a claim jumper. The murder of Tyler was committed, Adams said, after he and Simpkins had captured Tyler and held him prisoner over night. The next morning, on a first live ballot by 90 votes to 50 for Flanagan. Crawford had 7.

The convention was in the little club-room of the Mack crowd at Eighty-first street and Broadway. It was a physical impossibility to jam in the 150 delegates. Many voted by yelling in the doorway. Chairman Herbert Parsons was interested spectator. Quigg did not appear. Theodore P. Gilman was there, shouting for Flanagan. Frank C. Kingsland, who is now a stock broker at Albany, was in the hall shoved a glass window in on top of a Mack delegation—unintentionally and no harm done—the convention got down to business and Stanton was nominated. The nomination was finally made unanimous.

TO SELL CHICAGO TERMINAL.

U. S. Court Grants Foreclosure Decree to U. S. Trust Co. of New York.
INDIANAPOLIS, Feb. 23.—In the United States Circuit Court, before Judge Francis E. Baker, the United States Trust Company of New York to-day asked for and obtained a long decree of foreclosure involving over $100,000 against the Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company and the Baltimore, Ohio, Chicago Railroad Company, the Baltimore and Ohio company, Pere Marquette Railroad Company, Judson Harmon, receiver of the Pere Marquette Railroad Company, Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company, Pennsylvania Company, Chicago, Great Western Railway Company and other connecting roads.

The decree forecloses all of the properties of the Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company in the States of Illinois and Indiana. The judgment was for $18,824,689.75, one of the largest judgments, if not the largest, ever taken in the State.

The Chicago Terminal Company operates the inner belt around Chicago, leading to all of the railroads and most of the stations in the city, and also to East Chicago, Hammond, Whiting, Indian Harbor and Gary in Indiana. The decree provides that no bid for less than $15,140,000 shall be received, and that the property shall be sold at the main entrance of the Fifth avenue station in Chicago on a date to be fixed by the Master in Chancery after six weeks publication.

PARSONS MAN WINS.

Lucius M. Stanton Nominated for Assembly in the Fifteenth.

What the Parsons men described as an attempt by the old Quigg crowd to recapture control of their stronghold—now centered in the Fifteenth Assembly district—was frustrated last night after a hot fight. The test of strength was made possible by the calling of a convention to choose a candidate for Assemblyman from the district to succeed Mervin C. Stanley, who died recently.

Henry W. Mack, the new Republican leader of the district and the local representative of William Parsons, had as his candidate Lucius M. Stanton. Pitted against him was Frederick P. Flanagan, who had carried a district to victory for the Mack-Parsons cause last year when Quigg was overthrown. Mr. Flanagan disclaimed all connection with the Quigg crowd, but when it was seen that he had the support of the Quigg old guard the Mack-Parsons men began to yell "Quigg!"

John C. Coleman, one of the old timers in the district, got out of an embarrassing condition by supporting Henry J. Crawford, whose candidacy did not amount to much.

After wrangling from shortly after 5 o'clock until 11 the convention nominated Stanton by a vote of 100 to 90. Crawford had 7.

The convention was in the little club-room of the Mack crowd at Eighty-first street and Broadway. It was a physical impossibility to jam in the 150 delegates. Many voted by yelling in the doorway. DIDN'T HAVE BANKER WALKER.

Detectives Arrested Director Who Was Hunting Absconding Treasurer.

GALVESTON, Tex., Feb. 23.—It was a strange experience that befel Mr. George D. Copley here. Mr. Copley is a director of the New Britain, Conn., Savings Bank, the treasurer of which, William F. Walker, is missing, as is $350,000 of the bank's securities.

Mr. Copley happened to be in the South on business at the time Walker disappeared. His confidant in Connecticut communicated with him and asked him to keep his eyes open for the missing treasurer.

Mr. Copley, who is an elderly and sedate gentleman, had no previous experience as a detective, but he tried to do his best. He received a tip from the North that perhaps Walker might have sailed on a Morgan liner from New York. He proceeded to New Orleans and thence to Galveston in search of Walker.

While Mr. Copley was looking hard for Walker, there were others on the same job. There is a reward of $5,000 for the banker's discovery. The sleuths of a well-known detective agency were a hot on the same trail. They saw Mr. Copley. He is smooth-shaven, while Walker wore a beard. In a general way Mr. Copley answered the description of Walker, and Walker was reported to have shaved his beard.

So it came about that heavy hands were laid upon Mr. Copley and he was accused of being the man he was hunting for. Naturally Mr. Copley was flabbergasted. "Me Walker?" he exclaimed. "Why I'm looking for Walker!" That seemed too funny to the detectives, and the more Mr. Copley talked about Connecticut and the New Britain Savings Bank the more convinced they were that he was Walker.

It took a lot of telegraphing to convince the sleuths that they had the wrong man, and it was not until this afternoon that they concluded to let Mr. Copley go. Meantime Mr. Copley has decided to refrain from engaging further in the sleuthing business.
